When the local city and county shelter-in-place order went into effect on Monday, March 16th, the YMCA of Metropolitan Dallas pivoted traditional programs to provide free services to our communities. In partnership with numerous North Texas organizations, the Y was able to provide free emergency childcare to families who work in essential services, food distribution in low-to-moderate income communities, pop up supply distribution for necessary personal items and baby care, and virtual learning opportunities for preschoolers and teens.

"I cannot be more pleased to have my three children in the YMCA Emergency program. From the moment they started attending the YMCA Emergency Care in McKinney, the staff greeted them with open arms and have treated them as if they were theirs. The YMCA Emergency care staff have been amazing. I truly appreciate the care they have shown my children and thankful for the time they take to make sure that the children have access to complete their digital learning. The children look forward to being in attendance every day. Words are simply not enough to express my sincere gratitude for the YMCA Emergency Care Program."
